Remove Unwanted Foreground Elements in Photoshop: In this course, we'll discuss a method to tear down a fence to expose our subject hidden in the background. The first step is to use the the brush tool to make an image full of content to complete the majority of our work. We will divide the layers into which we create this layer not to damage the layers. After we've done that, we'll make another layer and apply some adjustments by using the spot-healing brush along with the Clone Stamp tool. The next step is to blend the eyes of another lion into our image. The final adjustments will be made employing the tool tilt-shift to blur those parts of the picture that we would like to blur out and create sharpening layers by using the filter high-pass and an inverted mask that brushes over the areas of the image that we wish to be sharpened. This gives us more control over the image we want to enhance.
