Although the title is The Constructivist The products of this series include Suprematism art too. Both art movements both originating from Cubism along with Futurism are thought to be in opposition. However, we view these two movements as one. Constructivism is an extremely pragmatic artistic and pragmatic approach, in which abstract forms have only one direction when combined with other elements from one meaning. In Suprematism, however, on the other hand, forms are not required to be able to define a significance, but instead be able to express their own personal emotions, moving toward abstraction and giving a "sense of sensation" (like the Black Square of Kazimir Malevich). We can see both as metaphors for the inner world of humans in which the desire for meaning is always in contrast to the desire to feel.
